Biscuit Line

Annual OSHA safety inspection

Safety inspection for your Bühler biscuit line equipment

The annual OSHA safety inspection gives your biscuit line a dedicated, once-a-year safety check, carried out by Bühler service engineers who know your equipment. Guards, emergency stops, and safety devices can wear, loosen or get damaged in daily production and cleaning. A structured annual check helps you identify machine-related hazards early and protect the people who operate and maintain your line. Documented findings support your OSHA compliance efforts* and safety records, so there are fewer surprises during OSHA inspections, customer audits, and insurance reviews.

What you receive

- Documented inspection findings for the Bühler equipment on your biscuit line
- Recommended actions, such as restoring or replacing safety elements, labels or damaged electrical components
- Corrective work by Bühler service engineers on request

What's inspected

- Guards, covers, and safety barriers
- Emergency stops, safety switches, and interlocks
- Light barriers and sensors
- Electrical connections, motors, and control elements
- Warning labels, safety signs, and markings
- Oven burner safety: flame monitoring, gas, and air pressure switches, emergency shutdown

Inspection points are aligned with key OSHA safety requirements for machine guarding, electrical safety, and workplace hazard prevention.

Benefits

- Safer working conditions for operators and maintenance teams
- Machine-related hazards identified and documented early
- Better prepared for OSHA inspections, audits, and insurance reviews
- Documentation that supports your safety program and records

How it works

- Conducted on site, once a year
- Performed by Bühler service engineers
- Can be combined with annual inspection and maintenance under a Bühler Service Agreement
